LIVE GROUP GAME · TOGETHER ROOM

CRISIS CHALLENGE

The whole room becomes one identity. Then a crisis lands.

A game for a room full of people. Everyone takes on the same identity, such as Bakers, DJs or Trotro drivers. A crisis appears on screen, everyone has 25 seconds to think, and anyone can share what they would do.

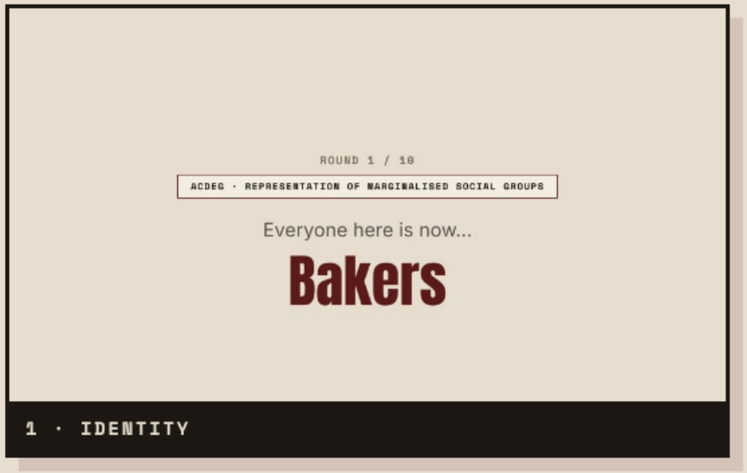

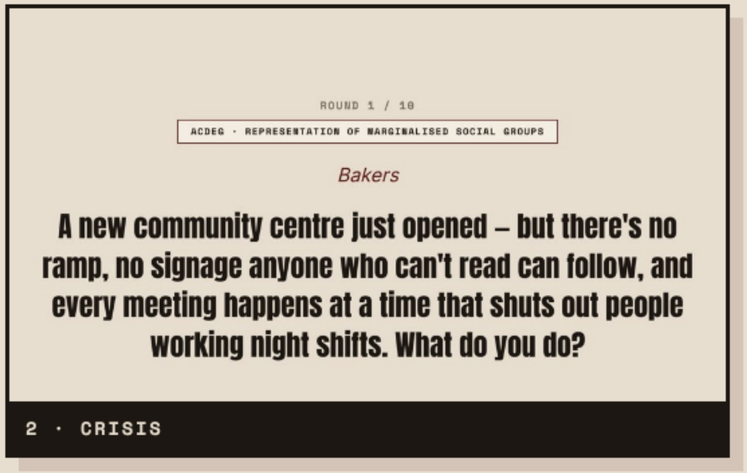

HOW A ROUND WORKS

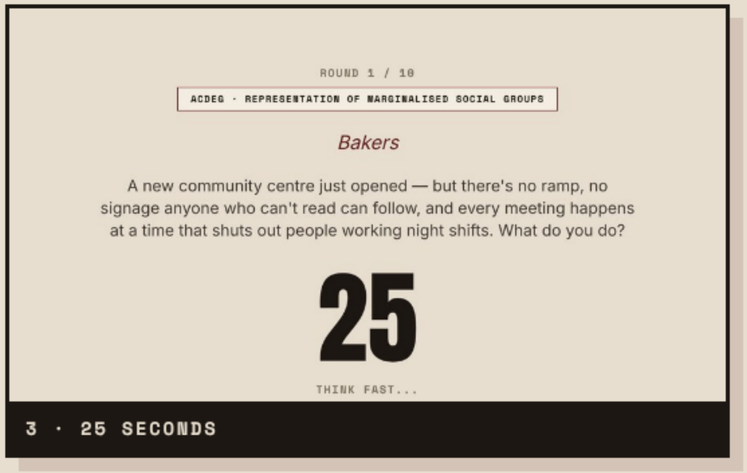

ONE IDENTITY. ONE CRISIS. 25 SECONDS.

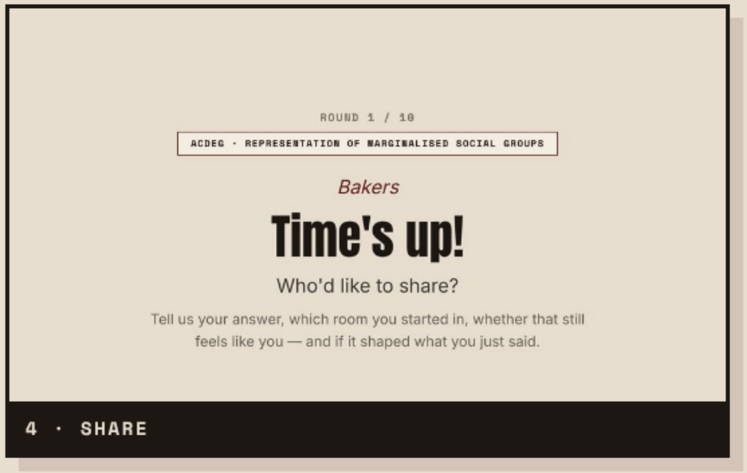

Ten rounds, one shared screen.

The room is given an identity, then a crisis. Everyone thinks for 25 seconds, then anyone can share their answer. They also say which room they started in, whether the identity still feels like them, and whether it shaped their thinking.

WHO IT'S FOR

GROUPS IN A ROOM TOGETHER

Participants at civic and cultural events

Anyone in the room can join in. No expertise is needed: the only question is 'what do you do?'

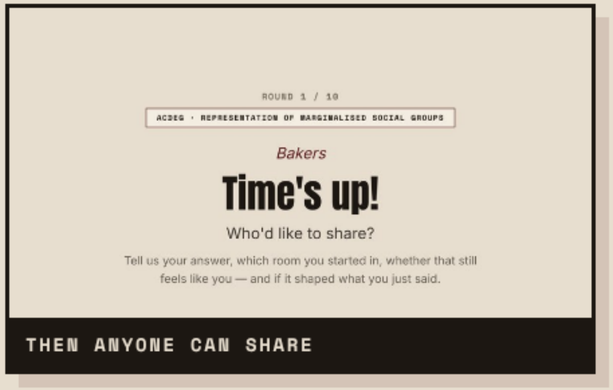

Anyone, whatever their background

The identities are everyday jobs: bakers, DJs, trotro drivers, mechanics. Every person has a way in.

Organisers and facilitators

One screen runs the whole game, from the first identity to the closing line.

WHY IT'S IMPORTANT

REAL CIVIC PROBLEMS DON'T COME WITH A BRIEFING

The game puts a room inside ten of them and asks what each person would do.

Taking on an identity you did not choose makes people think from another point of view. The room then reflects on whether that identity shaped their answer. The three themes come from the African Charter on Democracy, Elections and Governance (ACDEG).

4 rounds

Representation of marginalised social groups

A new community centre with no ramp. Announcements that are never translated. A committee that has never had a woman on it.

3 rounds

Constitutional changes of government

An election that keeps being postponed. New leadership rules decided by a handful of people. A leader who will not step down.

3 rounds

Democratic culture

Two neighbourhoods fighting over one water source. A community split in two by one public statement.

Crisis Challenge was the closing game of the Together Room.

"However far-fetched the identity felt, someone in this room always had an answer."

CRISIS CHALLENGE

WHAT IT IS

Crisis Challenge is a live group game for a room. Everyone takes on the same identity, such as Bakers, DJs or Trotro drivers. A crisis appears on screen, such as a postponed election or a leader who will not step down. Everyone has 25 seconds to think, then anyone can share what they would do. It runs over ten rounds on one shared screen and was the closing game of the Together Room.

WHO IT'S FOR

Groups of people in a room together, such as participants at civic and cultural events. No expertise is needed. The identities are everyday jobs, so everyone has a way in.

WHY IT'S IMPORTANT

Real civic problems do not arrive with a briefing. The game puts a room inside ten of them and asks what each person would do. The crises cover three themes from the African Charter on Democracy, Elections and Governance: representation of marginalised social groups, constitutional changes of government, and democratic culture. After each answer the room reflects on whether the identity they were given shaped their thinking.
